

An Invitation to Contribute

Curated Conversations

Ralph J Bathurst

The journal is starting a section for curated conversations about “relevant stuff” (apologies to Joe Walsh, 2012). Defining what is relevant is difficult, but we can be guided by what appears on our horizon: current events whether business, political, and/or social.

We aim that this section will be dynamic where a short observation might turn into a wider discussion of issues that the post stimulates.

I have started with a piece titled ‘The Kennedy Center 2025’. We invite you to write a response to thicken this story; to push the ideas further or offer alternative perspectives. However, we are not seeking ‘like’ responses as in a social media post. Rather, we are seeking conversational pieces written in a spirit of respectful generosity, while calling to account those who must give account. Commentaries and resistances can assume many guises, including a song, a poem, an essay, or an image.

Once this issue has been aired, we will discuss others, and if you have a burning idea, please let us know so we can plan further conversations.

In the first instance, we welcome contributions in response to this initial provocation.
